Join us (providers and clients) for an interactive 6-hour workshop on Conflict to Connection with relationship experts Linda and Charlie Bloom.

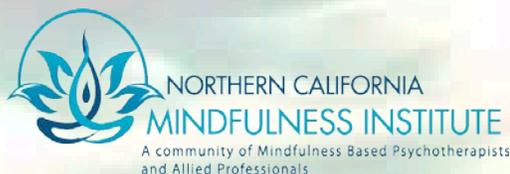

We are drawn to others not because of our similarities, but because of our differences. They provide the means for growth and development. Differences are inevitable in relationships; conflict is optional. Differences become conflict when there is a power struggle to convert the other person to our way of seeing or doing things.

Because most of us have seen few examples of effective conflict management we are inexperienced in this arena. Through interactive exercises, group process, lecture and dialogue, this workshop will provide:

- Means through which skills of “conscious combat” can be learned
- Factors in development of healthy and fulfilling relationships
- Managing differences skillfully
- Factors applying to effective conflict management

About the presenters: Linda Bloom, LCSW and Charlie Bloom, MSW have been married since 1972. Trained as psychotherapists and relationship counselors, they have worked with individuals, couples, groups, and organizations since 1975. They have lectured and taught at learning institutes throughout the USA. To learn more about Linda & Charlie Bloom, please visit their website at www.bloomwork.com.
